

Hey there, TCM rock stars! Remember at the beginning, when I first started podcasting, I said I would bring on the shakers, the movers, and all the people who make a difference in our lives as practitioners? So we, in turn, can make a difference for our patients. Well, today I've got a friend of mine, Suzanne Chilton, who is the Foot Guru reflexologist.

Today we talked about the history of reflexology.

Walk like an Egyptian. You'll see what that is a sentence I'm putting in there in the introduction. It's a lot of fun. We talked about the reflexes, the foot basically reflecting the whole body. How do we utilize reflexology in our practice as an extra tool for us. To support our patients in a way that's non-invasive and very calming to patients because it puts them in a parasympathetic state.

I love microsystems. Ear acupuncture, belly acupuncture, Dr. Tan's balance method, and reflexology is another one that I truly, truly enjoy in my practice. And I learned it all from Suzanne because as you know, we don't learn reflexology in our TCM schooling.

So I brought her on so she can explain all this to you. I want you to stay till the end because she has a little gift for all my TCM Rockstar community today!

Because it's my birthday week, and so she's offering you guys something that you are going to love.

I'm not going to let you wait any further. Let's start the show.

Welcome to Acupro, a show dedicated to making Chinese medicine and acupuncture easy to grasp and fun to learn. Hi, I'm your host, Clara Cohen. I support practitioners and students like you in changing the world one patient at a time. My goal is to share my passion for TCM and empower you to achieve superior patient care.

I love to showcase the amazing benefits of acupuncture because after all, acupuncture rocks!

Clara

I'm so happy that my friend Suzanne Chilton is here today because this is going to be such a different episode. I've always said I'm going to bring practitioners and people that complement what we do as acupuncture practitioners, and you are the perfect one to have here. On top of it, you are here for my birthday week. So yay!

Suzanne

Yay!

Clara

We are together on my birthday. So welcome, welcome Suzanne.

Suzanne

Clara, thank you so much for having me. You know I always love chatting with you, so this is going to be awesome.

Clara

So Suzanne and I know each other. We actually met on Instagram because her Instagram totally rocks, and she's such a good teacher. She teaches so well on Instagram. And so we kind of started DMing and asking each other questions and connecting that way. Then we realized we were both in the Vancouver area, just in the suburbs of Vancouver.

It was just so funny. We're like, "Hey, you want to meet?" So we ended up meeting and really getting along and really liking each other's personality. And so we developed a friendship. The reason I brought her in today, is because what does she do?

Well, Suzanne for the last seven years has been a registered Canadian Reflexology Therapist. Reflexology, as we know, totally complements what we do as acupuncture practitioners. She also is the founder of Foot Guru Reflexology. I love the word 'guru' because it means teacher, and Suzanne is such a great teacher.

We can know something, but we're not always good at passing it on, and you're so good at passing it on. That's why I think I really enjoyed your videos, and that's how I connected with you on Instagram. So you obviously treat patients, and you're going to people's houses; you do in-home treatment. But you also teach practitioners how to do what you do.

And so I'm excited about this as well. So before we start, I would love for you to tell us, how did you get into reflexology, specifically foot reflexology? Why did you decide to do this?

Suzanne

Thank you so much again for having me. I love chatting with you. Reflexology, for me, wasn't a direct thing that I got into. Actually, I come from the arts. My background is in the arts. But it was one of those serendipitous things, which I love in life.

I love getting messages from the universe and knowing when something feels right. And actually, I went through a hard time with my husband early on in our relationship when we met. He developed cancer, and he was only 31 years old. I was helping him and being his caregiver, helping him through everything. Quickly I realized that he needed an alternative therapy to help him with all the side effects he was going through: chemo, radiation, and we did all the regular doctor's stuff.

But I knew that there must be something else out there that could help him alleviate the pain, alleviate stress, and basically help him to that next level.

I had been in the arts previously, so I was used to using my hands. And over that time of being a caregiver, I realized that I really want to help people heal. So that sort of started me off on the path of thinking about what do I want to do where I'm using my hands, but I help people. I was thinking about bodywork, right? Or I was thinking about maybe massage. And it was actually a massage therapist of mine that mentioned reflexology.

Once I dove into it and started looking at the feet and how it's based in TCM and there are so many layers to it—there's energetic, there's the physical, there's the anatomy—and that by learning this, you can go deeper into helping the body heal, I was just fascinated by it. I loved that you could continue learning more.

It was such a gentle thing that I could start using that with my husband to help him get back on the road to recovery. Once I dove in and realized how interesting it was, how the whole body is connected in that microsystem in the feet—we have that in our hands as well, we have it in our face and our ears, as you know, with acupuncture—but once I dove into that and realized how amazing it could be to affect the whole body through the feet, I was just hooked. And since then, I've touched a lot of feet, and it doesn't bother me. So yeah, it's been really great.

I love it. And since then, I've touched a lot of feet. I love it.

Clara

What's interesting about what you share is that, you know, it was a difficult time. Often in life when there is a difficult time and we are in the middle of the struggle, it's very hard to see what will come out of it that could be positive, right?

And this is one of the positives because, you know, I'll share with everybody, your husband is alive and he's around. Yes, so it's really, really positive, obviously, from that perspective. Then it got you to do something that not only you really enjoy doing, but you're really good at teaching.

I wanted to share something with you before I ask you questions. Years ago, before we met, before I even went into TCM, I was in the fitness industry, and in the fitness club, there was a lady that had posted,

"I do reflexology." And I thought, "Oh, I've never done this before. I should try it."

So I made an appointment, and it's for next week. The next week happened, and I was teaching.

For those of you who are not in the Vancouver area, we are on the water, and so when you are in downtown Vancouver and you're trying to go to the North Shore, you have to go through either one or two bridges, and those bridges are always packed with a lot of traffic.

And of course, I had my appointment on the other side of the bridge, and I got stuck on the bridge, as we all often do in Vancouver. I hate to be late. Now, prior to this, I was teaching an aerobics class.

I drank like a liter and a half to two liters of water right after I had taken a shower. Then I jumped in my car, and then tried to get to my appointment on time.

I had given myself a lot of time. Unfortunately, I do not like to be late for anybody. So I parked my car with one minute to spare, I rushed into it. And there was a lady there who was the assistant, and I said, "Hello."

And she goes, "Oh, you need to fill out all these forms." I'm like, "Oh, no."

So I'm trying to fill out all the forms as fast as I can because I feel so bad. Plus, you know, it's my hour with this lady. I don't want her to be late for somebody else.

Also, I need to pee so bad, so bad, but I don't want to make her wait another, you know, 30 seconds to a minute to two minutes.

So I get in, and she's really nice. And she's like, "Come on in." We sit down, we start talking. She asks me a question. Then I lay down, my feet are ready to go. And she literally looks at me, looks at my feet, and she goes, "So your bladder is a little full. You need to go pee." I was like, "No way."

Suzanne

Yeah, she was doing a little bit of footreading there.

Clara

She sure was. I was like, "Yeah." And she goes, "Go for it." So I went and emptied my bladder and came back. I love it when people surprise you when you do something for the first time in a good way, obviously. That was such a great surprise because it instantly gave me trust in her ability to know what she was doing.

Suzanne

That's one of the things that reflexology, you'll notice as you get it done. A lot of people, their stomachs are gurgling, it gets the digestion moving. People usually have to use the bathroom after they need to go pee, so I'm glad that you went beforehand. Otherwise, you would have been really struggling in the chair there the entire time.

Clara

I'm so glad she made me go too. For the people that have never had it, what does a reflexology session look like?

Suzanne

So what's really nice about reflexology is it's super noninvasive, so you're really just taking off your socks. I like to pull the pants up to the knees just because I like to work on the legs as well. There are some reflexes on there as well. But I have a zero-gravity chair, so people sit in this really amazing chair that everybody loves. You get tilted back, I make you cozy with a blanket, and I basically just wipe the feet down.

I'm just using the pressure points and the reflexes on your feet with my fingers.

In that way, it's very noninvasive. I also have a very gentle style. There are different styles of reflexology, but mine's all about getting the client and the patient into a very calm, relaxed, parasympathetic state so that their body can do the natural healing, right? I work very gently; it's not usually painful, and people often fall asleep during it.

I go through and I work through about an hour session, working all the different parts of the body via the feet. And then I work a little bit up the legs as well.

Then after that, I can go back in and target different points. If a client said that they're dealing with a digestive issue or they've got a lot of congestion in their lungs, they've had a cough or asthma, I can go back and work on those different reflexes and just pinpoint those. And then after that, I just let the client relax for about five minutes again because their body's in that nice natural healing state. Just letting the cascade of everything happen.

We're balancing hormones as we're working on the feet.

We're helping move the digestive system and the urinary system, so it's really good for boosting our immunity by getting the lymphatic flow going as well.

And then it actually blocks nerve signals for pain too. So it's really great at blocking pain for people and then having them feel so relaxed afterward that they're reduced stress, their anxiety, and then the pain goes down too. It's really a great experience overall. Like I said, most of my clients just end up falling asleep during it.

I always share with them afterward what I found in their feet too. And that's a little bit of the footreading that happens. As well as like when I'm working on the feet and I'm feeling around with my fingers, I'm feeling for different imbalances. So people always love that part.

They always want to know, "What did you find in my feet?"

And I have to tell them, like, "Okay, don't worry. It's not like it's a crystal ball and because I find something in your lung, it means that you've got something wrong with your lung. But it does mean that there can be an imbalance there. There can be a blockage of some sort." So I've been working to relieve that for them.

Like your experience. She did see that your bladder was probably a little bit puffy. So she knew you had to go to the bathroom. But yeah, I always remind people that it's not a scary thing, I'm not going to tell you have some crazy disease or anything like that.

I can't diagnose you like that, but we can definitely tell by different colors in the skin and the feet and different ways that I feel the reflexes if there's that imbalance going on and if we need to create a better channel, same as working with the meridians of the body. We need to open up that channel so everything can start flowing and working better. And we can reduce the stress hormone in the body.

Clara

That's why I love microsystems and reflexology is one of the microsystems, right? Like you were saying at the beginning, I love the ear reflexology. We have belly reflexology, different methods like Dr. Tan or Master Tung's that's very specific to acupuncture. And then we have the foot reflexology when.

You see a map and you have a great map, your map of the foot reflex reflexes. It shows really well where everything is located, how to access it and how to access each of them. I love to kind of see that because it's so useful in, accessing the body, parasympathetic state also allowing the body to detoxify because feet have a great ability to detoxify.

So I love that the lymphatic drainage, so let's say you see someone for the first time and you know, you kind of went around your routine and ask them what they would like to work on.

Do you focus on one thing during a session? Or do you do the whole thing each time just to kind of balance everything? How do you go about it?

Suzanne

When I see a client, I like to go through the whole foot first. Usually just to help balance everything out. I do feel it's important to work all the body systems together, but as I mentioned before, I can go through that pretty quickly if I need to, and then go back in and spend some extra time on a certain body system.

I can go back in and work on the endocrine system, so all the different glands in the body. There are different techniques and holds that I can do to kind of balance them together. So yeah, I always like to do the whole foot. And then I can go in and work on different issues that someone might be having. The reflexes I think are going to help with those, and I can focus on that a little bit more.

That's usually how I do it when I see a client because everybody, at the same time, is really wanting and liking that relaxation. I feel like if I missed out on doing the whole foot, they might be a little bit like, "Hey, you just were working on my heel the entire time." So yeah, I always like to go and do the whole thing and then go in and target certain areas, depending on what we're working on.

You always say that you're trying to help people with their health one reflex at a time because we're doing the same thing, one acupuncture point at a time. So it's kind of like really similar the way you approach as a whole system the person's foot or feet instead of just targeting one area.

Clara

I really appreciate you sharing this. When you are going to do a session with your client and you're doing both feet, obviously the reflexes are the same, reflecting on each foot, but are there differences from the right to the left?

Suzanne

Basically, the right foot usually mirrors the right side of the body. The left foot mirrors the left side of the body. We always work reflexes for, for example, on both sides. Say you have neck pain more on this one side. I do work it on both because every once in a while it can cross over, but in general, it's the same foot to the same side of the body.

And there are differences. So for example, on the liver, being a little bit towards the right side of the body. We have a bigger liver reflex on that right side and smaller on the left, and the same with the stomach. The stomach crosses over both to both feet as well. The spleen, for example, is just only on the left foot whereas those other ones cross over both. So there are a little bit of differences depending on the actual anatomy of the body.

Clara

That makes sense. So is the heart in both or is it just more on the left?

Suzanne

So there are some different foot maps based on different cultures. There are slight variations in the foot maps. I have seen the heart reflex just be on the left foot. But personally, with the one I use, I have it split between the right and the left.

I do take that into consideration and it's all part of the holistic approach of reflexology. When we see things like calluses or corns. It gives us an indication that there might be a little bit of protection over that reflex.

So, first of all, when we're working on it with our hands. It's going to be a little bit harder to get through that callus to actually trigger the reflex underneath. So I always encourage people to try to remove a little bit of that. But it also gives us an indication that there is more tension and imbalance in that reflex.

For example, if they have calluses around the heel, that represents the reflexes for the pelvis and the glutes.

It can be anywhere from the hip around the glutes all the way to the inner pelvis as well. So when I see that, I always ask people if they have a lot of tightness in that area or pain. Especially because the more callus they have, the more they usually feel that discomfort in that area.

We also use a bit of foot reading to interpret different colors in the feet. More redness or blue lines over a reflex can indicate inflammation or stagnation of energy, respectively. So I might work on those reflexes more if needed.

Usually, where people have those calluses is where they have a lot of tension. Sometimes there will be some calluses that seem a little bit out of place. So it's all part of the assessment process and addressing the whole body through the feet.

But again, for me, that's an indication that there's some imbalance in that area and we need to work on that area more.

Clara

This is so cool because it's so similar to TCM. Redness is excess heat in TCM, which means inflammation. Yellowish is excess dampness, which means there's a lot of either fungus or candida, or there is a lot of excess body fluid that shouldn't be there. It should be more moving. Bluish purple is always a stagnation.

So I love that it's the same.

Can you tell me a little bit of where the history of reflexology comes from? Because it's so similar to TCM.

Suzanne

The first known where they can pinpoint. Seeing where reflexology started, although I'm sure it could be much older, was with the ancient Egyptians. So they actually have hieroglyphics where they show people working on people's hands and feet. And so that was about 5000 years ago. But they also have some ancient footmaps from China, Vietnam. Basically over in the Eastern countries as well.

They know that people were practicing this. I'm sure they were practicing TCM too. It's probably around the same age. But I love the hieroglyphics because I've always loved Egypt. I've always had an affinity for Egypt.

And there is a quote that I don't have it exactly, but it's something around

"If I let you touch my feet, just don't harm me. So it's like work in a way that you're going to heal me and bring that whole body wellness."

Then, around the 1900s, there was a Dr. Fitzgerald who took reflexology and modernized it, beginning to practice it. Then, Eunice Ingham, who was a physiotherapist, helped him make the current map that we use today. She mapped the reflexes on the feet because they noticed that as they were working on patients in hospitals. Helping them recover from surgeries, if they pushed on different points on their feet, it actually helped them recover faster.

And that's how they went about creating the first foot map that we use today as more of a modern map. So it's only been around in a modern context for about 124 years, give or take. But of course, as we know, it's more of an ancient knowledge that I feel like was just being rediscovered.

And that's where I like to learn to go deeper. I like to learn about meridian reflexology and base it on that TCM. I do really feel strongly that that kind of knowledge is at the basis of reflexology for sure.

It's like any medicine; it gets molded by different people. And we arrive at something that we have today, same with TCM. There are a lot of schools of thought. Lots of different texts and classics that allow us to learn and then adapt it as time changes.

Clara

That was really interesting because 'Walk Like an Egyptian,' you know, that song 'Walk Like an Egyptian.' It's just like when you talked about Egypt, all I could see is people walking like an Egyptian. They were walking barefoot. They had to have, you know, foot massages. I know every time you give me a foot or a face massage, either one or the other, I will fall asleep. So I know it totally puts me in that parasympathetic state. Obviously, acupuncture does this too, but as a massage itself, you can massage my upper back, and I love it, and it's great, and you can dig in there, and it's fun.

But when you massage my feet or my face, I'm snoring within 10 minutes.

Suzanne

Totally. And what's cool about reflexology, and that I often get asked this distinction between massage and reflexology because they are different. But like massage, we are working on the soft tissue of the body. Whereas reflexology, like acupuncture, is more triggering those nerve reflexes. Those points in the feet that send a signal up the spinal cord to the brain and then out to the referral area.

And we're working on meridians as well. So for opening up a channel here, it's going to affect that organ there.

But yeah, those Egyptians, if they were building the pyramids and stuff, all barefoot, I'm sure they needed relaxation after that. And just some release, right?

I feel like I had a past life there. So I'm like, this is not weird to me that I found this because it was after I found this that I was like, okay, I have this affinity for Egypt and I went back and checked and it was the priests and the priestesses who normally worked with the royalty they were the ones connected to the gods and they were the ones that practiced and taught the reflexology so it's super cool that it's just it feels like it's more than just touching your feet.

They really revered it as something where we're connecting you to your body, to the gods. And so I was like, I must have been a priestess back then, obviously.

Clara

Obviously.

Suzanne

It's all coming full circle and I'm doing it. I'm doing it again, right? Because honestly, I'd never in my entire life before, like I said that situation happened with my husband and going through that whole experience.

So I do really feel like it was destined and it was meant to be. The deeper I go with reflexology, the more of an understanding I just have of the body within the universe and how there's that deeper connection.

And I'm sure you feel the same thing when you're doing acupuncture and TCM.

Clara

This is why we connected so easily and we could kind of, you know, become friends. We have a lot of similar way of thinking, which I think is so cool. Even though what we do is different, it's the same.

Misconceptions that people may have about reflexology. Have you ever had questions, like, I know for acupuncture, the misconception is, oh, it's going to hurt really bad, right? Or, and I'm like, no, it's not. Is there a misconception that you see with reflexology?

Suzanne

Yeah. I get that a lot too. Most people, when I first see them, I've asked them if they've had reflexology before, because most people have, and it's been a very painful experience. Very excruciating. Some forms of reflexology, you can even use a tool like a stick. Vietnamese is more deep tissue and actually Chinese reflexology is more deep tissue as well.

But that's the biggest thing. People feel like it's going to really hurt. And as I mentioned, my personal style is all about less is more. It's more about specificity and being really intentional about the reflexes rather than pushing really hard to create a response, right? I always mention to people, it's a nerve reflex, so you can feel the lightest touch on your hand.

Someone doesn't have to push really hard. In that way, I've actually found that working in a lighter, gentler way can actually be more effective, especially if you're dealing with clients or patients who have a lot of pain or autoimmune conditions, a lot of inflammation in the body because the last thing we want to do is push hard and then have their body tense up and have them be on guard.

So the more relaxed it can be, the more their body can really sink in and trust the practitioner. Trust me to take them into that parasympathetic state. So then the body knows how to naturally heal, right? We're just trying to remove some of the blockages.

People's feet are sensitive. They're very sensitive. They're not used to walking over rocks and wood and all this stuff. Yeah, I feel like a lighter approach is definitely effective. And as I've gone on and worked longer with a client, I go deeper as well. If it feels like there's stuff that needs to be released, I will go deeper.

But in general, that's probably the biggest misconception.

Clara

"I'm in the same school of thought. The fewer needles, the less amount of needles that I can put in a patient in order to trigger a response, I'm going to do. And I'm also going to make sure that this person is relaxing. Cause you're right. If they're in the fight or flight the whole time, cause they're in so much pain, how are they going to get in the healing state?"

Suzanne

They can't heal.

Clara

No, exactly.

One of the things that I talked about when we first started is that it's my birthday week. La la la.

Suzanne

Don't say how old you are, though. People don't like that.

Clara

I don't care. What am I? I was born in '68. What does that make me? 56! Woo!

Suzanne

Amazing.

Clara

I have no problem with my age. So, you know, as long as I'm happy and I'm having fun and I stay healthy.

So it depends on how you're on your head and your body. Because it's my birthday week, you are so sweet because one of the things that you do is you do teach practitioners a course that is such a great, Course for practitioners like me to add as a little extra tool for their patients and I took your course.

I was like a year and a half ago and I loved it because it's simply straight to the point or straight to the reflex Ha ha ha pun intended.

Suzanne

Yes, to the reflex, and it's so easy to follow. You give us a routine, You give us everything we need in order to be able to start practicing reflexology on our patients, and my patients love it.

Clara

I don't do it on everybody, obviously, but I've done it, or I've asked patients, especially if they are in a state of real stress. So a lot is going on and we've put the needle, and I can see it's going to take them a while to relax. I'm like, okay, let's add this up. Or sometimes I do it at the end or sometimes if it's a new patient.

I might do maybe five minutes, just five minutes to relax them before I needle them because maybe they're anxious about the needle. So I love that you created this course for us practitioners to have that extra tool in our box. Can you please share what's in the course for everyone to understand what I did?

I know many people have done it. Last year you were so kind to offer it to the Acupro Academy community. And so many people took the course and came back and said it was awesome because you're a great teacher.

Suzanne

And you know what, I was actually shocked when you originally told me that you didn't learn about foot reflexology in your training because as I mentioned before, they're so closely related, and I do feel like reflexology comes from TCM. So I was actually shocked to hear that you didn't learn about that.

And like you said, it's an amazing way to bring an extra tool in for your clients, your patients. So that you can amp up the effect of the effects of what you're doing already with the acupuncture. It is amazing for people, as you mentioned, that can be really nervous around needles. It's a great way to start that way, and because you're touching their body, it is a really nice way for practitioners to connect with their clients on a little bit deeper level by touching their feet. Right, the feet are really sensitive, and it's really much more intimate than just massaging their back.

It's nice to connect with your clients in that way, and then, as I mentioned, amp up the effects of what you're already doing by mirroring the same thing on the feet through the reflexology. The course that I created shows you how to start with basic reflexology techniques. So that you can be doing that properly on the feet.

I set you up with a 20-minute routine so that you can help release the stress and anxiety in your clients. Also boost their mood, and decrease any pain that they might be feeling.

So this increases the relaxation.

Helps them get into that parasympathetic state so that then whatever you're doing with your needles, with your acupuncture can work even better. I lay it out really simply so that you can follow along, and when you're finished the course, you can start using it right away, and it's been really helpful.

It's really helpful, as you mentioned, for lots of acupuncturists and TCM doctors, and I've had a lot of other RMTs, massage therapists, and a lot of other practitioners use it as well, so it's really a great tool just to be able to add to your toolkit.

So the course is about an hour. But you would have to go and look at it a couple of times and really take the time to do your homework and to practice because I think that's the best part of it.

Clara

That's what I did. Also, you do get a certificate after you write a quiz and pass a quiz, just like all the courses that are supposed to be out there because that's how we get continuing education hours anyway. But what I really liked is that it was very geared for us practitioners to just add on.

Because it was my birthday week last year, you gave everybody a discount on the course. And so this year I was like, well, maybe my TCM Rockstar community could benefit from another round of this.

So I asked you, would you give another discount on the same course as last year, and you were so generous in giving us a discount again for the same course as last year for all the people that didn't have the chance to take that course for my birthday as a birthday present to my community. So I love that. But you also have, for the people that took the course prior last year, they can upgrade. A lot of people asked and said, okay, I really like this course, but can I get the next level?

Suzanne

I had such great feedback from your practitioners and your students on the beginner course. I created an advanced course. So this one's actually longer than the first one. I've added in some more routines to add on to that 20-minute routine that was in the beginner course. So you can have a longer routine to share with your clients.

So this is going to cover more reflexes and more relaxation techniques. And then I'm also going to dive into some personal techniques that I've honed in on over the seven years that I've been doing this, so we're going to go into some more advanced techniques that I have created and honed in on.

And then we're also going to jump into some different routines and protocols for some of the top things that your students and practitioners asked for. So things like for stress, sleep, and insomnia.

Balancing hormones in the body for women's health and also fertility. And then colds and immunity. So there will be routines for more of those specific issues.

And then I'm also going to share more about foot conditions and the foot reading that we chatted about today. And then there will be a certificate of completion as well. So we're just going to dive a lot deeper into how you can use reflexology even more intentionally to help your clients based on what you're working on.

Clara

I know there was a demand for it. And a lot of people that took your course, like I said, really asked, okay, what's the next level? Right. So for the people that are listening to this podcast, we'll have all the links in the show notes below. So in case you were looking for where to found the course, where'd you found everything, obviously.

But also if you're listening to this podcast on the release date, which is my birthday, Suzanne is being very generous and is giving a discount for that beginner-level course that we did last year. She's offering the discount again this year, which is so sweet, but that is going away March 26.

So I really, really hope that you listen to this before March 26. If not, it's all good. You could still enjoy the course right after it, but the discount will go away on March 26.

Can you share your website and Instagram with us?

Suzanne

So if people want to learn more about me, my website is a footgurureflexology.com. And I do have a link on there to my free tutorials that takes you over to my YouTube channel. I have lots of 30-second tutorials, just on specific reflexes. People have really loved those cause it's really easy to just dive in and try them on your own feet.

And all of my socials are the same thing. So they're @FootGuruReflexology.

Clara

I love that you are very generous with your teaching online as well. You like to share a lot so everybody can see the amazing benefits of Reflexology. Thank you so, so much for coming on today.

I hope that everybody really benefited and seriously, this is a great course. So if you haven't taken it, I would seriously consider it because it's a great tool to add to your toolbox. Madame Suzanne, this is my mom's name, by the way, Suzanne.

Suzanne

Yeah? Awe.

Clara

Madame Suzanne, thank you again for coming. I really appreciate your time.

Suzanne

No, thank you so much Clara. You know I love you. You're definitely a mentor to me with the way that you share online as well. And I'm so happy to help any of your TCM rock stars on your end. I would love for them to dive in. They can reach out to me if they have any questions about the course.

I'm happy to help out and yeah, looking forward to it.

Clara

Awesome. Thank you.

Thank you so much for spending your time with me today. I truly hope you benefited from this episode. I would love for you to share it with a friend that may benefit from it as well. Follow the show, leave a review, and if you want more, go to my website acuproacademy.com. I have tons of resources there with treatment protocols, case studies, free courses, and so much more.

And connect with me on all social media @acuproacademy. I'm on YouTube, Instagram, Facebook. And no matter what, keep rocking it using TCM.
